To The Reader

No genealogy is ever completed. Even if it is up to the minute when it is published, the births, marriages and deaths of a living family call for a revised edition on each passing day. Finding the parents of the oldest of the line and, with them, their other children, would demand a book many times larger than this to record all of their descendants. Most family histories, therefore, appear only after the compiler believes that he has reached an impasse, prehaps because he has reached the emigrant ancestor and future research would have to be done overseas at the cost of greater time and effort, sometimes because he senses the end of his own life approaching and wants to preserve the results of a lifetime of search before it is too late.

This tract is of a different type. Still young, with the prospect of many new discoveries just over the horizon, I pause to record what I have learned over the past four years for critical apprasial and so others may avoid duplicating this work and can press on to solve new problems. This, therefore, is a progress report - an assessment of where we stand and an implicit challenge to you to help extend our ken.

A family history is an endeavor in which everyone can help; indeed, everyone must help if it is to be the most accurate record of the family that can be compiled. No one knows you as well as you know yourself and no one is as quallified to write your own entry for the record. The least that you can do is send in your family record for inclusion in the next compilation. But your contribution need not end there; everyone knows facts about his own parents and his brothers and sisters and most of us know something of our grandparents' families. Thus there are at least two more families whose histories you can help complete. This is the material of which genealogies are made.

Even if the families you know already appear in this edition, send your data in anyway. There are many statements in this compilation for which the evidence is weak and your affirmation may be the key to renewed confidence in them. Don't be intimidated by "facts" you find here which you think are wrong; even the most carefully compiled genealogy will have some errors and a major goal of this report is getting rid of these errors. And don't be embarrased because you are unable to complete the record of one of your ancestors; no isolated fact or even tradition (plainly labeled as such) is too small to be of some use.

What should you send ? Here are some suggestions: for each marriage, the husband's first, middle and last names, his place and date of birth, his father's and mother's full names (including his mother's maiden name), the date of the husband's death and the place where he is buried, the place and date of the husband's and wife's marriage, the wife's first, middle and maiden names, the place and date of her birth, her father's and mother's full names, the date of her death and the place where she is buried; for each child, their full name, the place and date of birth, their spouse's full name and the place and date of their marriage, the date of the child's death and the place of burial. Other information about any member of the family might include: other marriages, church memberships, education, military service, occupations, residences, public offices, medals, awards, honors or other distinctions.

Other things that are within everyone's reach and will be most welcome include the names and addresses of your relatives, the names and addresses of Blairs from your local telephone and city directories, copies of data from Blair histories you may find in your local library, copies of Blair marriages, land records and wills that you can find in the clerk's office of your county court house and the accounts of older people about family relationships.

Some of you who read this will be actively working on your own family histories. If the information in this phamphlet is of any use to you, let me encourage you to copy it into your record. I have deliberately refrained from copyrighting this material to promote the widest possible dissemination of the data I have compiled.

Finally, a word about how this genealogy was compiled. In keeping with the concept of a progress report, the data reported here is the skeleton of a final genealogy, restricted to the names, dates and locations of members of the line. Much additional information remains in my files and will ultimately appear in what I hope will be the definitive work on this line.

Most of the data recorded here is taken from the Federal Census Records of 1790 through 1880. This primary dependence on a single source has tended to limit my studies to this period; yet, it permits an objective apprasial of the best records which are publicly available. Other sources include Bible records, tombstone epitaphs, county marriage and will records and numerous letters from many friends who are also working in this line. Although I haven't the space to credit each of them individually, two have contributed so much as to warrant special mention: Mr. N. Patrick Banks and Mr. Troy L. Back. Their sharing of their records has enabled me to include many of the names of Blair daughters who married before 1850 (when Census listings began to give the names of wives and children) and the names of many of their husbands and families. In addition, their extensive compilations have given me two independent records with which to compare my reconstructions from the Census. Of course, in some cases, there have been disagreements between sources. My means of resolving these differences is simple yet, I believe, effective; I always choose the source which was closest to the individual concerned. Although this procedure may have permitted some fallacies to creep into the record, I trust that - on the average - the record is better because of it.

Your letters will always be welcome.

How to Use this Index

Index citations are to family designators; these are the letters which appear, in alphabetical order, in the left margin before each paragraph. Direct descendants are indexed only to their own paragraph; their parent's designator is found by removing the rightmost letter of the child's designator. Relations by marriage are indexed to the Blair to whom they are related. The number "1" is used for references to the paragraph of Charles and Easter Robertson Blair.
